

Rheumatology – Subcutaneous Injection

Rheumatology is a branch of medicine that deals with the investigation, diagnosis and management of people living with rheumatic and musculoskeletal diseases. These diseases are usually caused by problems in the immune system, inflammation, infections, or the gradual deterioration of joints, muscles and bones. Rheumatic and musculoskeletal conditions affect soft tissues, joints, bones, cartilage, tendons, ligaments and muscles – also known as connective tissues.

Subcutaneous Injection: Certain types of arthritis and other autoimmune diseases can be managed with a type of treatment called subcutaneous Injection. A subcutaneous injection is an injection that delivers medication into the layer of fat between the skin and the muscle. This type of injection can be given by a healthcare professional, or it can be self-injected.

Our Service

The nurses and doctors work as part of a multidisciplinary team. The Rheumatology department offers a comprehensive range of treatments. We also work closely with GP colleagues to monitor treatments in stable patients via agreed shared-care protocols.

Guidance for Patients

Whilst you are waiting for your injection the Versus Arthritis website has drug information booklets available online of the infusions you are going to receive:

GP surgeries are still open

GP practice staff are also helping patients to manage their conditions at home while they wait for hospital appointments.

GP surgeries are still open and are working differently to how they did before the COVID-19 pandemic and GP practices continue to make best use of telephone, online and video consultations. Face-to-face appointments are still being given to those who need it.

When you phone or use an online form to contact your GP surgery to make an appointment, you will be asked some questions which are designed to help staff guide you to the most appropriate clinical person to help you with your condition. This could be a nurse, clinical pharmacist, physician's associate, GP or paramedic.

A list of GP practices with relevant contact details are available on the following website:
